

The Landscape is an annual magazine of the Department of Geography, Shaheed Bhagat Singh College, University of Delhi, a forum for young geographers. Nowadays, it is crucial for everyone in the world—students, teachers, scholars, leaders, and others—to understand the diversity of the geography subject. A nation’s desire for growth is frequently set back several decades by disasters, natural calamities, social issues, increasing unplanned settlement, as well as environmental pollution, which destroys the hard-earned rewards of laborious developmental efforts, impedes progress, and alters the geographical landscape at a faster pace. Therefore, we bring some vibrant themes in the form of essays, stories, reports, and case studies through our annual magazine, Landscape. Landscape is a lovely fabric that unites a variety of viewpoints, concepts, and perceptions since we received a wide range of thoughts and ideas on our theme from the collection of essays and articles from students and from various departments across the universities. This year, we have published its 17th volume on the theme of “Geo-Environmental Hazards and Disasters.” Hopefully, readers and students in different levels would relish reading the magazine.
